

SUPERINTENDENT'S Brief

SUPERINTENDENT ANIBAL SOLER, JR.

WEEK ENDING OCTOBER 15 2021 | VOLUME 1 ISSUE NO. 13

Our focus as a school district is to ensure that our students are educationally successful, prepared, and that they graduate from high school ready for the next chapter in life whether it be to go to college, enter the workforce, military or other. To that end, we must ensure that we have a healthy culture and school environment in which teachers can teach, and our students can thrive and learn. We must have clear expectations, support of parents, and we must work in partnership with our families and community.

You may have heard in the news lately, that schools across the country are struggling with student behaviors as kids re-adjust to regular socialization, interaction, and school norms. It is no different in Schenectady. In local recent news reports, there has been much shared about the culture and some of the disruptive behaviors at Schenectady High School. I want to share some of changes and how our high school team is responding. The shift we are working toward can only happen with your awareness, understanding and support.

Please keep in mind, when we returned to in-person learning, most of our secondary students had not been inside their schools with their teachers and classmates for about a year and a half. We knew that coming back to school would be an adjustment for everyone including students, and staff. We also knew that we would have to keep a close eye on the pulse of our environment at all levels and be ready to respond as needed.

Most of the behavior issues including student disruptions, verbal altercations, or physical fights, don't begin inside the school. They often start outside in the community or on social media, where kids could say what they wanted and be able to hide, until now. External conflicts are now sometimes manifesting in our hallways. I want to be clear these aren't groups of kids or brawls. We are talking about two kids going at one another or one student targeting another for one reason or another.

Our students are learning the rules all over again. They are learning to socialize all over again and on top of it, some are dealing with grief, mental health issues and anxiety. There is nothing easy about this and we must work together to help our students work through these challenges. It is equally important that we, as a school community, build and reinforce a culture of high expectations, respect, and accountability. Parents, guardians, and caregivers play a crucial role in making this happen.

Schenectady High School has announced a school wide "reset" in which the school is going back to basics to connect, educate and provide understanding around expectations and consequences of behaviors.

Students at Keane Elementary School have a new favorite staff member this year. His name is Zumi and he is a 2-year-old facility dog from Canine Companions for Independence. Zumi works with school counselor, Ameera Crellin, a Licensed Master Social Worker, who has been working for our district for 14 years and completed an intensive training program to work with Zumi. More photos on page 5.

The high school leaders have communicated the plan with parents and have held student assemblies throughout the week to engage students and talk about upcoming changes and expectations. Chris Chank, executive principal, and Dennis Green, acting high school principal, sent a letter to high school families outlining the expectations, changes that will take place, the purpose and how behavior will be monitored. This information was also shared through a short video message.

Among the changes being implemented next week at the high school is a shift to a block schedule. A student's teachers and courses will not be changing but they will only have four classes a day, each 90 minutes long. This shift will reduce the number of transitions and times in the school hallways, where the disruptions often occur.

We will also be tightly implementing the "closed campus" policy which means only those with senior privileges approved by the administration will be allowed to leave the campus for lunch.

Our work with students also includes mediation strategies and restorative circles for conflict resolution, problem-solving and relationship-building. Our goal is always to identify an issue and to provide resources and emotional support before an issue escalates to a serious situation.

We will continue our work through a lens of equity and trauma-sensitivity but it is important for students and parents to know that there are consequences for inappropriate behavior. These are clearly outlined in our Code of Conduct.

While the fights and disruptions are often highlights in the news, most of our student body is coming to school ready to learn, doing the right thing every day and are pushing their classmates to do better. They are disheartened when they hear about a fight or see a media report that casts a dark cloud over their school because of a small portion of our population. Our students deserve to hear about the positive accomplishments of their classmates, good news of the day, and feel proud about where they go to school.

Families play an important role in shaping the culture and climate of, not just our high school, but each of our schools. As we reset and re-engage our school community, please partner with us by communicating and talking about expectations for your child at school. We will keep you posted as we move forward.

Thank You

Thank you to our parents for your continued trust in us during the pandemic. We remain grateful for your patience and swift response when things need to change quickly due to the many variables impacting school right now.

This morning, Mont Pleasant Middle School called a half day dismissal due to the number of staff members who called out. School administrators did the best they could but were not able to secure enough substitutes or coverage for a full day of instruction. It's worth noting that all schools in the region face similar issues and pull from the same teacher substitute pool. While it's the first time this year that one of our schools was forced to do this, I'm confident it won't be the last. There is no indication that today's absences are COVID-related.

Thank you Mont Pleasant families, for your patience and quick response to our notification. This morning was a perfect example why we need to stay connected and prepared to act when unexpected issues come up. We are planning for a regular full day at Mont Pleasant on Monday.

Finally, we continue to honor and celebrate our principals this month. Today, join me in celebrating and thanking Christina Howard (Pleasant Valley), Job Thomas (Lincoln), John Perreault (Woodlawn) and our newest principal Tanya Delamater (Van Corlaer). See page four for more. Thank you for all that you do.

Phishing may be “one of the oldest tricks in the book,” but it is still incredibly effective. And although it may be hard to spot when you may be in the midst of a phishing attempt, by exercising caution and deploying these few fundamentals, individuals and organizations more broadly can drastically mitigate the chances of falling victim to a phishing attack.

Verify the Source

Phishing content comes in a variety of ways, however, many phishes will try to impersonate someone you may already know -- such as a colleague, service provider or friend -- as a way to trick you into believing their malicious content is actually trustworthy. Don't fall for it. If you sense any red flags that something may be out of place or unusual, reach out directly to the individual to confirm whether the content is authentic and safe. If not, break-off communication immediately and flag the incident through the proper channels.

Be Aware of Vishing and Other Phishing Offshoots

As more digital natives have come online and greater awareness has been spread about phishing, bad actors have begun to diversify their phishing efforts beyond traditional email. For example, voice phishing -- or vishing -- has become a primary alternative for bad actors looking to gain sensitive information from unsuspecting individuals. Similar to conventional phishing, vishing is typically executed by individuals posing as a legitimate organization -- such as a healthcare provider or insurer -- and asking for sensitive information. Simply put, it is imperative that individuals be wary of any sort of communication that asks for personal information whether it be via email, phone or chat -- especially if the communication is unexpected. If anything seems suspicious, again, break-off the interaction immediately and contact the company directly to confirm the veracity of the communications.
